FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

'Tis said, Seculsion hath no balm For him, whose base pursuit is gold;
'Tis said, retirement ne'er can soothe The heart of avarice:
I envy not the man
Who shuns reflection's hour.

Reflection's hour!—to few 'tis known,
To these, the chosen time, how dear!
To retrospection consecrate Is the heart's alone.

I will not on its boards intrude, Nor tell how fancy riots there; Suffice it, that to Misery's child Is given the holy time.

Then memory wanders, and the forms Of days, departed, hover near;
Then childhood's smile and childhood's sigh Dissolve the soul again.

How fair the visions, boyhood knew!
How strewn the way with thornless flowers; Past joys, recalled, seem more than joys, Past sorrows seem like bliss:

I envy not the man
Who shuns reflection's hour.

LINES

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

To those who may have reason to felicitate themselves on their application, the following verses may prove an acceptable though imperfect offering.

I've oft to thee confessed, love,
The pure and ardent flame That burn'd within my breast, love, And thou didst own the same:
Like heaven's enkindling ray, love,
Its radiance round us spread,
To light our opening way, love, Where youth and pleasure led.

I prize thee most sincere, love, My passions earliest vow Was breath'd with hallow'd fear, love, Lest thou shouldst forget it now:
Thy kind and gentle heart, love, Thou' warm with purest truth, Might with that jewel part, love, Where pleasure tempted youth.

The glorious sun on high, love, More constant can't pursue His course throughout the sky, love, Than is my heart to you;
And like that sun it beams, love,
With warm affection's fire,
And rapture on it gleams, love,
As oft thy smiles inspire.

And I have prov'd thee fond, love, Through chequer'd scenes of woe,
All other bliss beyond, love,
To know and feel thee so,
To know that thou art mine, love, The treasure of a heart That sooner would resign, love,
This life than with thee part!

This life than with thee part!

SONNET—TO *****

Say, shall we meet again, With smiles of mutual gladness;
Or shall we e'er remain A part in anxious sadness?
When last we bid farewell, My heart was fill'd with sorrow, Yet hope seem'd proud to tell We part, to meet to-morrow.

The morrow's sun arose, But hope, I found, deceiv'd me,
For twilight's ling'ring close With no kind news relieved me.
I oft, in memory's dreams, Live o'er again those hours, When social pleasure's beams Charm'd with their witching powers.

Yet in that pleasing view, Which memory's oft revealing, The pain of our adieu Seems e'er my bosom stealing.
For moments thus gone by May pass—alas!—forever, And like a farewell sigh Our fondest joys may sever.

Our dearest hopes are vain, They smile but to deceive us,
And leave us worlds of pain With no balm to relieve us.
Oh! let us meet once more,
Or if thy heart say—never, Adieu!—our friendship's o'er—We're parted, then—forever.

WOMAN'S LOVE.

A woman's love, deep in the heart,
Is like the violet flower;
That lifts its modest head apart In some sequester'd bow:
And blest is he who finds that bloom, Who sips its gentle sweets;
He needs not life's oppressive gloom, Nor all the care he meets!

A woman's love is like the spring Amid the wild alone,
A burning wild, o'er which the wing Of clouds is seldom thrown;
And blest is he who meets that fount Beneath the sultry day; How gladly should his spirits mount How pleasant be his way!

A woman's love is like the rock That every tempest braves, And stands secure amid the shock,
Of ocean's wildest waves;
And blest is he to whom repose Within its shade is given;
The world with all its cares and woes, Seems less like earth than heaven.

MORAL AND RELIGIOUS.

THE HOUSE OF MOURNING.

While travelling through a lonely forest of the western country, I came to a solitary cottage, partly shaded by stately trees.
On my arrival at the door, I knocked upon the post; a person stepped forward; drew aside a blanket that served as a door, and bade me come in: I went in, sat upon a bench, and reclined against the side of this rustic dwelling; when, looking round me, lo! it was the house of mourning.

There, in one corner, on a bed of straw, in benumbed death's chill embrace, lay the wasted remains of an affectionate husband and protecting parent. A melancholy sensation unavoidably pervaded my mind.— But a few hours since, his mortal existence trembling on the verge of dissolution—at length, dropped into the vapory oblivion of unknown; and his immortal existence rose on soaring ideal pinions to Him who gave it.

Yes—he is progressing in that measure-less journey from which "no traveller returns;" he has left his relations and changing pleasures, and gone far, far from this tabernacle of mourning.—No more shall he groan under the racking pains of sickness; no more shall the sorrows of this woe-worn world canker his felicity.

While thus reflecting on a sublime futurity, a neighbor entered this solemn and silent house of death; he recalled my mind to the gloom of mortality; I again looked round on the members of this sorrowing family. Here sat a weeping companion, absorbed in the profusion of grief; holding a smiling infant that had not yet learned its own mortality, or realized the bitter dregs of human woe. There leaned a child against the chimney corner, and oft turned her eyes towards her lifeless father, while a filial tear would trickle down her tender cheek. All, all seemed as living monuments to declare the event of death; and, though mantled in silence, yet they manifested a realization which no tongue could express.

Having rested a short time, I rose and went out. It was the Sabbath; the sky was clear, and the sun had passed the meridian—I again resumed my journey, and as I walked along through the little opening that encircled the rustic domicile, and looked on the labor of him whose body was now mouldering away, to mingle with the common elements of our mother earth, I was again wrought up in pleasing and melancholy contemplation—that all the works of our labor will soon know us no more for ever; and as I entered the lonely woods, whose leafy trees shaded my path, methought I was entering the "valley and shadow of death." And while recollection reached to my mind the joys and sorrows I have seen, I shall never forget the house of mourning.

VIATOR.

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

When we reflect upon the value of reputation and character—the dangerous liability we are constantly under of losing it, and the extreme difficulty of regaining it after it is once forfeited, we cannot be too vigilantly careful in preserving such an inestimable jewel. In this we are the guardians of our own happiness, and we shall find, that "he who stumbles, falls, who falling finds none to help him," and if he is even favoured by time to make atonement by good conduct for his former errors, still, the remembrance of them will rise like departed ghosts before him—he will recollect them with pain, and the uncharitable will sometimes reproach him, if not openly at least with sarcastic sneers and unmanly insinuations. And, although the good and wise, will cast the mantle of forgiveness over his failings, his own heart will still reproach him, and destroy that confidence which is ever the shield of innocence. He will be tempted to quit the circles where he is known, because he knows not to what extent a censorious world may extend their prejudices against him—he will be induced to banish himself from the society of his former acquaintance to seek in the novelties of some distant and new abode that happiness which he has unfortunately lost. Here he must raise a new name and a fortune for himself, and happy will he be if he so profit by the mistakes of his former days, as to secure him from error in future. Whenever a man is overtaken in a fault—if he has been hurried by passion's impetuous impulse into the commission of a crime, or by even a venial error, has forfeited the good opinion of his neighbours, instead of making his defence by a vain attempt to cover and palliate his guilt, he would act more wisely to acknowledge his fault with humility, and endeavour by future good conduct to conciliate the esteem of his fellow citizens—for mankind are always slow to believe what a man has to say in extenuation of his own faults, and it often happens that the more vigorous his defence is, the more firmly his guilt is fixed upon him.

THE SOLITAIRE—No. IV.

"Of all human actions, pride seldom obtains its end; for aiming at honour and reputation, it reaps contempt and derision." MONTAIGNE

Pride is one of those vices which people generally overlook, because they all partake of its influence. It is, nevertheless, a demon of a very base kind. It is a principle which ought to be held in the greatest abhorrence, and cast from the breast as a viper with a deadly sting. Under the dominion of pride we serve the devil, for where it exists, neither virtue, religion, nor morality, can abide. As, therefore, these only ought to influence the mind, so every particle of pride should be rooted out, and "meek-eyed humility" cherished in its stead. It is not the pride of dress that I would have in view, neither is it a pride of excelling in virtue or learning; but it is an overbearing spirit which will trample upon the poor, the meek, or the ignorant—destroy their rights, and heap up a pile of injuries when a fountain of blessings ought to rise in view. It is a pride which fills the possessor with conceited notions of his own excellence, and makes him consider all other mortals beneath him. It is a pride which, with an ocean of vices, aspires to the perfection of deity, and aims at a throne which it never was intended man should ascend. It is a pride with which Lucifer himself was possessed, when he attempted to overthrow the throne of Grace, and rise superior to the "great first cause." Like Lucifer, too, will the fall of that spirit be, who possesses the vice just mentioned. For a while fortune may smile upon his vanity, and success crown his views; but in the end he will find his doom irrevocably fixed, and finally cast beneath the most abject of those whom in his prosperity he did not deign to look upon. Humility is the principle intended for us; it is a heavenly principle; it sheds a lustre on human nature, makes it acceptable to the Creator, and at last crowns it with a wreath of never-fading joys.

A PRETTY STORY.

The late Earl of Exeter had been divorced from his first wife, a woman of fashion, and of somewhat more gait of manners than "ladies who love their ladies like."— He determined to seek out a second wife in a humbler sphere of life, and that it should be one who having no knowledge of his rank, should love him for himself alone.
For this purpose, he went and settled in Hordnet, an obscure village in Shropshire.
He made overtures to one or two damsels in the neighborhood, but they were too knowing to be taken in by him. His manners were not boisterous, his mode of life was retired, it was too odd how he got his livelihood, and at last, he began to be taken for a highwayman. In this dilemma he turned to Miss Hoggins, the eldest daughter of a small farmer, at whose house he lodged. Miss Hoggins, it might seem, had not been used to romp with the clowns: there was something in the manners of their quiet, but eccentric guest, that she liked. As he found that kind of regard which he wished for, he made honorable proposals to her, and at the end of some months, they were married, without his letting her know who he was. They set off in a post-chaise from his father's house, and travelled across the country. In this manner, they arrived at Stamford, and passed through the town without stopping till they came to the entrance of Burleigh-Park, which is on the outside of it. The gates flew open, the chaise entered, and drove down the long avenue of trees that leads up to the front of this fine old mansion.—As they drew nearer to it, and she seemed a little surprised where they were going, he said, "Well, my dear, this is Burleigh-House, it is the home I have promised to bring you to, and you are the Countess of Exeter!" It is said the shock of this discovery was too much for this young creature, and that she never recovered it. It was a sensation worth dying for. Ye Thousand and One Tales of the Arabian Night's Entertainment! hide your diminished heads! I never wished to have been a lord but when I think of this story.

THE ITINERANT—No. VII.

PROVERBS FOR BACHELORS.

1. Covet no woman's love, but whom you will be diligent to oblige—for a small neglect is taken by them as a great ingratitude.
2. The love of a virtuous woman is a great blessing; but if once lost by ingratitude, you will find that she will turn her love that could not last into a revenge that will.
3. A proud woman, like an imprudent prince, always loves him best by whom she is most flattered.
4. If you aim at the favors of a lofty mistress, you must highly extol her person and parts, and agree with her opinion in all things, though ever so opposite to reason.
5. A proud woman, like a stately horse, must be managed with a curb and strait rein.
6. That virtue is never safe that is under the guardianship of pride; the latter will be maintained, though the former be sacrificed to maintain it.
7. Pride in a beautiful woman is like a flaw in a diamond; it lessens the value, spoils the lustre, and remains incurable.
8. He that hath a prudent wife hath a guardian angel by his side; but he that hath a proud wife hath an evil spirit at his elbow.
9. Giving presents to a woman to secure her love is like filling a sieve with water.
10. She that hath some design upon you will first oblige you with some engaging courtesy to become her debtor; but be careful of those women who are generous in the beginning.
11. Ingratitude is said to be worse than the sin of witchcraft; and he that trusteth a woman he hath once found ungrateful, is worse than he-witched.
12. Court not a reconciliation with a woman who hath once deceived you, lest she triumph over your submission, and make you bear the burden of her infirmities.
13. To a woman you love behave yourself boldly and with freedom, though justly and respectfully; for a manly behaviour will awe her to be grateful, when a cringing fondness may occasion her to presume on your good nature.

Lines written on returning home.

Dear lowly cottage! o'er whose humble thatch, The dewy moss has velvet verdure spread;
Once more, with tremulous hands, thy ready latch I lift, and to thy hovel bow my head.
Dear are thy inmates! beauty's roseate smile,
And eye soft melting hails my wished return; Loud clammers infant joys—around, meanwhile, Maturer breasts with silent rapture burn.
Within these narrow bounds I reign secure, And dutiful love and prompt obedience find, Nor sigh to find my destiny obscure, Where all is lowly, but each owner's mind Content, if pilgrims passing by our cell, Say "with her sister peace, their virtue loves to dwell." W. P. S.

PUBLIC MEETING.

"And over Fashion's votaries wield the sceptre." In pursuance of public notice, a numerous and splendid meeting of our female Corinthians and tippy Exquisites, convened at Dandy Hall on the evening of the 19th inst. in order to devise some scheme whereby the dresses and appen-dages of Fashion should be subjected to the criticism of persons of acknowledged taste in the beau monde before they were exhibited to the gaping eyes of the congregated world. ROGER RUM-ONE, Esq., a Grecian of the first water, was called to the chair, and, in compliment to the Ladies present, Mrs. Martha Modish and Miss Fanny Furbelow were nominated as his supporters, Samuel Scribe officiating as secretary for the evening.

Mr. Rum-one, as soon as order could be obtained, rose from the chair, and gracefully waving his right arm to enchain the attention of the audience, began, "Ladies and Gentlemen, it has been often a source of the deepest regret to me, that in this, our famous city, there should exist no society, to whom the importations of fashion, from France and England, should be assigned, and from whose flat and example the Boods and would-be Exquisites of the lower orders, should adopt their costume. In London there flourishes such a society, from the ingenuity and judgment of whose members originate every new design, while their power is so universally acknowledged and their displeasure so deeply dreaded, that no person of fashion, however outlandish by the society, dare introduce any innovation in the established cut. I now beg leave briefly to state the object of myself and friends in calling this meeting, which I feel happy to find so numerously attended, it is to propose for your consideration the formation of a society similar in its jurisdiction and intentions to the one now existent in the metropolis of Great Britain. As I conceive the exertions of the Ladies will be requisite in carrying the plan into effect, should any of them coincide in my ideas the meeting will feel honoured in hearing their sentiments.

The moment the president had taken his chair, Miss Susan Spencer and Miss Biddy Blue-hose both sprang to their feet, when the chair having decided the floor in possession of the latter Lady, she commenced—"Such a society was not only well calculated to answer an admirable purpose, but it was absolutely necessary something of the kind should be established to reside in the republic of Fashion, and also to take cognizance of the rank of those who appeared in our streets arrayed in the newest mode. She deplored as a lamentable truth, that no sooner was an improvement established in any article of clothing, but every Laundry and Chambermaid appeared on the promenade in it, thus keeping the inventions of the leaders of Fashion eternally on the rack to devise something new. Such glaring facts (she continued) called peremptorily for reform. She therefore concluded by moving that a committee be appointed to devise some regulations for the government of said society, and report them at our next meeting, and that power be given to said committee to fix upon a suitable designation for the embryo society."

The above question was carried by an unanimous vote, and the meeting adjourned until Friday, the 27th inst. having previously instructed the Secretary to make such an arrangement with Messrs. Atkinson & Alexander, the editors of the Saturday Evening Post, for publishing their proceedings as he should think proper.

R. RUM-ONE, President.
S. SCRIBE, Sec'y.

THE DERANGED PARROT.

Certain physiologists have asserted, that madness was one of the privileges of human nature; that the instinct of animals, being surer than our reason, was likewise more solid, and that their brain was not so liable to get out of order. I answer this by the anecdote of the Parrot of M. de Bougainville, which was as completely convicted of lunacy, as ever was an inhabitant of Bedlam or Charleston. This bird less remarkable for its plumage than its chattering, was for two years on board the ship of that celebrated navigator, and a great favorite with the officers, to whose amusement he very much contributed. Having one day had an engagement with an enemy's vessel, during which the cannonading had been extremely sharp, it was found that Kokoly, the Parrot, had disappeared, and though the most diligent search was made for him, he was nowhere to be found.— It was supposed he had fallen by the wind, if not by the blow of a bullet; but to the great surprise of the whole crew he was seen two days afterwards, coming out of the cable tier, where it appeared he had hid himself.

His re-appearance excited the greatest joy, and almonds and carresses were most prodigally bestowed upon him; but Kokoly was entirely insensible to these demonstrations of kindness, and looking around him with a most stupid stare, imaginably, answered all the questions put to him only by an imitation of the noise that had so much frightened him;—poum!—poum!—poum!—were the only sounds he could pronounce! I myself saw this unfortunate bird twenty years after the combat, perched upon a stick in an antechamber, repeating his eternal cannonade, and accompanying it with a beating of his head, and fluttering of his wings, in which his fright was still depicted.

Gibbon's appreciation of his own character.

"May 8th, 1762.—This was my birthday, on which I entered into the twenty-sixth year of my age. This gave me occasion to look a little into myself, and consider impartially my good and bad qualities. It appeared to me, upon this inquiry, that my character was virtuous, incapable of a base action, formed for generous ones, but that it was proud, violent and disagreeable in society. These qualities I must endeavour to cultivate, extirpate, or restrain, according to their different tendency. Wit I have none. My imagination is rather strong than pleasing. My memory both capacious and retentive.— The shining qualities of my understanding are extensiveness and penetration, but I want both quickness and exactness." [See Gibbon's Miscellaneous Works.]

Cheerfulness and hilarity, when unprovoked by unwholesome incentives, undegraded by brutality, or tainted by licen-tiousness; instead of being interdicted as a crime, ought to be prescribed as one of the means of urging a lazy circulation.— A man may be merry upon principle, and occasionally take a laugh, as others do a walk, for the benefit of his health. "A celebrated Italian comedy turns altogether upon a stratagem to cure a hypochondriac by making him laugh. It is much in our power to look on the sunny side of things, instead of keeping the eye constantly fixed on the darkened hemisphere of human life.
There is no faculty of the mind which it is of more consequence should be exercised and cultivated from the earliest youth than that of self-control. This power is to be improved by exercise as well as that of the memory or the muscles.

The young are slaves to novelty, the old to custom.

THE OLIO.

"Variety's the very spice of life, That gives it all its flavour."

[Mr. T. Moore has lately published a third number of the National Melodies, equal, if not superior, in all respects, to either of the two former ones. We subjoin from it the following song adapted to a Venetian air. It is of that kind in which he pre-eminently excels.—Paul Allen.]

SONG.

Now gently here, my gondolier, So softly wake the tide That not an ear on earth may hear But her's to whom we glide.
Had Heaven but tongues to speak, as well As starry eyes to see, Oh think! what tales 'twould have to tell Of wandering youth like me.
Now rest thee here, my gondolier!
Hush! hush! for up I go, To climb yon light balcony's height, Whilst thou keep'st watch below.
Oh! did we take for heaven above, But half such pains as we Take, day and night, for woman's love, What angels we should be.

EARLY RISING.

The morning of every day is the beginning of every man's life. One of your greatest errors—for I know you well and do not mean to flatter you—one of your greatest errors is, that you do not seize upon these beginnings of your life so early as you might do. You lived yesterday, indeed, to a good old age, and died last night after the powers of your mind and body were entirely exhausted. But I must remind you, my friend, that you have spent the greater part of the youth of this day in the state of the dead. The great business of your life was up before you; you have been running after it this whole afternoon, and I am afraid you will never overtake it till old age overtakes you.

FITTING THE HEAD.

In a trial which lately took place in the court of common pleas, London, where the plaintiff was a tailor, and the defendant an insolvent man of fashion, the following discourse took place:

Counsel—"Were there two of the coats that did not fit?"
Witness—"They did not fit the head." Counsel—"The head! I thought coats were usually made to fit the body?" Witness—"They were made to be compelled to disclose secrets of trade. The question was pressed." Witness—"We often make coats which fit extremely well, but so fine is found, and they are sent back to be altered. In such a case, we say they do not fit the head. We keep them a proper time, and then send them back untouched, when they are found to be just the thing, and to fit delightfully."

A HIGH AUTHORITY.

Mr. Curran was once engaged in a legal argument; behind him stood his colleague, a gentleman whose person was remarkably tall and slender, and who had originally intended to take orders. The Judge observed that the case under discussion involved a question of ecclesiastical law—"Then," said Curran, "I can refer your lordship to a high authority behind me, who was once intended for the church, though, in my opinion, he was fitter for the steeple."

In a certain town, not more than fifty miles from Boston, as the clergyman was holding forth in his usual drowsy manner, one of the Deacons, probably influenced by the narcotic qualities of the discourse, fell into a doze. The preacher happening to use the words, What is the price of oil earthly pleasures? The good Deacon, who kept a small store, thinking the enquiry respecting some kind of merchandise, immediately answered, seven and sixpence a dozen.
